DES MOINES, Iowa (WHO-DT, CNN) -- The Iowa Department of Public Safety is now part of an investigation into claims that the residents of the Glenwood Resource Center, which treats intellectually and physically disabled Iowans including children, were subject to human experiments.

The Iowa Department of Human Services issued a statement regarding Glenwood Resource Center on Monday.

It said DHS Director Kelly Garcia requested support from the Department of Public Safety to "assist in reviewing additional allegations made in the course of her fact-finding efforts. The Department of Human Services will continue to be transparent and provide updates as this unfolds, being careful not to jeopardize any aspect of the investigation."

The U.S. Department of Justice is already investigating and sent a letter to Gov. Kim Reynolds last month, saying it is specifically looking into claims that the facility performed sexual arousal and optimal hydration studies on residents.

"We are working with the DOJ doing everything that we can first of all to make
